THE MEMPHIS DAILY APPEAL-THURSDAY, JANUARY 28, 1875.

Killed by a Fellow-Countryman, Named Longonetti.

Shortly after ten o'clock yesterday morning a fatal stabbing affray took place at the corner of Front and Monroe streets, which resulted in the death of an Italian fruit-dealer named J. B. Coari, at the hands of a young fellowcountryman named Louis Longonetti Coari was a stout, heavy, able-bodled man, while Longonetti is a short, chunky-built young lad, about eighteen years of age. He has been employed in Mancini's saloon, on Madison street, for several months, and was well known to the frequenters on 'change as a goodnatured, happy-looking young Italian. During business hours he had occasion to pass Coari's fruit-stand, at the corner above mentioned, and although he and Coari were on very good terms, the latter was in the habit of jeering Louis about his shape, and calling out to him as he passed: "How are you, bologna sausage?" This exasperated Longonetti, but he took it all in apparently good humor until yesterday morning, when, as he was passing with his employer's breakfast in a basket, Coari repeated the miscellaneous appropriation bill. The offensive epithet. Louis remonstrated bill of Senator Lewis, which has been with him about his conduct, when he raised his fist and felled the lad to the ground, kicking him after he was down. Longonetti tried to defend himself, but this only subjected him to more blows and kicks, and his right eye was severely cut and bruised in the melee, and his face was covered with blood. A large crowd soon collected and Coari was called on to desist. of the river, and is built in all other re- In the affray Longonetti's basket had spects in accordance with the conditions and limitations of the act entitled "An act to establish certain postroads," apepithet towards Coari, and dared him to strike him again. Coartrushed forward through the crowd and struck Louis a heavy blow in the face. Louis quickly plunged his hand into the basket and seizing a large knife used for cutting bread at the saloon lunch, made a lunge with it at Coari as he was about to follow up the blow. The knife which had a blade about ten inches long penetrated Coari's abdomen inflicting a frightful wound. Coari placed his hand on the cut and staggered back, when several of the bystanders ran to his assistance. He became deadly pale and became very faint. He was conveyed to his house on Court street near Second, where Dr. John Taylor and Dr. Rogers were speedily in attendance. He was, however, beyond the reach skill, and he died medical about an hour after receiving the fatal wound. Longonetti gave up the knife to Alderman Hillsman, who was a witness of the affray, and was afterward arrested in Mancini's saloon by Officers Scott and Boyd.
